RE: Experience with Curatron

Date: 9/13/2006

Dear Mr. Philipson,

This is just a note to let you know about my experienced with the Curatron magnetic field device. As you know I have had extensive clinical experience in the area of electromagnetic treatment of various problems such as pain, multiple sclerosis, and sinusitis. Early in my career I wrote several papers on the subject, but presently I have been using various devices personally and on friends as a favor. I am convinced that this field is the future for many breakthroughs in medicine yet to come.

I originally had used a pulsed magnetic field device called the Magnetotron. I used it in a pain clinic over 20 years ago and was satisfied with varying degrees of success. I, myself, am an avid tennis player and am always pulling muscles or getting a tennis elbow. For this reason I started using this device on a regular basis. I soon found it was very beneficial, not only for musculoskeletal problems, but also for things like relaxation, sleep, and sinus congestion.

I was always concerned what would happen if the device ever broke down, because I did not know how to replace it. Sure enough after many years it broke down. I searched the Internet and found your Curatron and ordered the professional model. Needless to say I am extremely pleased. The Magnetotron was a barrel and bulky. The Curatron uses flat coils and is much easier to use. The computerization of various frequencies and the strength of the magnetic field is also superior. In addition the quality and workmanship of your device is excellent.

Please keep up the good work. I recommend your product without reservation.

Sincerely,

William Bauer MD
